

Scoop WebEdit

In the office or on the road, have complete access to your editorial environment. WebEdit allows you to create article packages, edit articles and move them through the editorial workflow using nothing more than a web browser.

Scoop WebEdit is a web-based editorial workflow management and article creation tool that can be used by reporters, editors and photographers.

Access

WebEdit can be set up to replace the traditional heavy client in the newsroom or enhance access to a user's personal basket structure from remote locations outside the newsroom.

Editorial baskets with pre-defined permissions are presented to the user upon login. A click on any basket will present the user with a complete list of articles in that specific basket.

Once an article is selected, WebEdit displays a preview of the article including any associated images. Each article has sixteen (16) additional metadata fields that are presented to the user.

Creating and editing

Simple and Scoop go hand-in-hand and creating an article with WebEdit is a perfect example. Clicking the "New Article" button opens up a new window that contains a text editor, blank article, a summary and a fact box, comments and a picture upload area.

In WebEdit reporters and editors can use the same editorial styles that they use in the newsroom. Articles are also "auto saved" when created or edited with WebEdit.

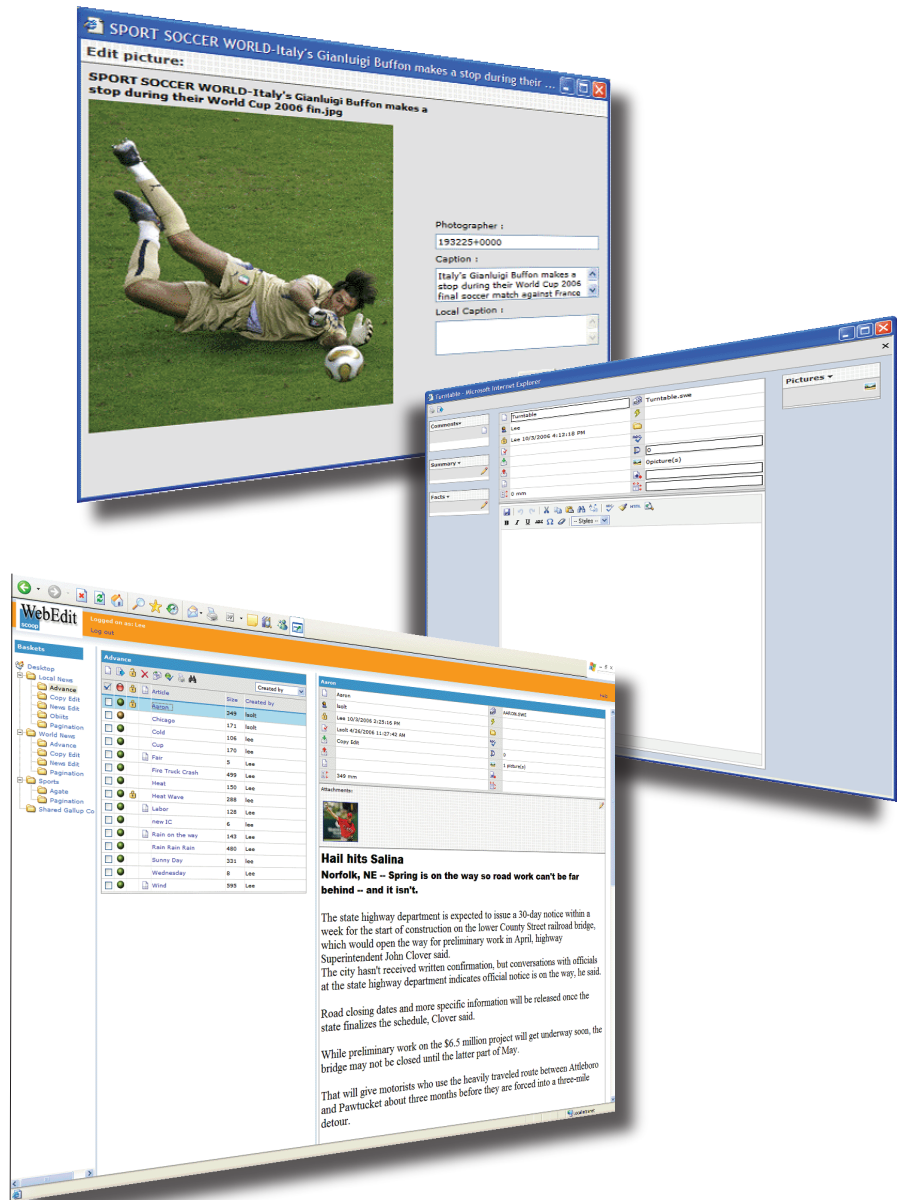

Images can be uploaded directly to the story, allowing for a complete story package to appear in the editorial database. Captions can also be written and edited directly in WebEdit.

Site-defined status icons can be selected to show the current state of a specific article in the editorial workflow.

Article concatenation can also be done in WebEdit, saving time in pagination.

Moving articles through the normal editorial process is also accomplished using WebEdit. With just a few clicks, an article can be moved from one basket to another.
